Directed by Clyde Bruckman, Buster Keaton
Written by Buster Keaton and Charlie Smith
based on William Pittenger’s 1863 novel, The Great Locomotive Chase
Producers by Buster Keaton, Joseph M. Schenck
Cinematography by Bert Haines, Devereaux Jennings
Film Editing by Buster Keaton and Sherman Kell
Art Direction Fred Gabourie

Marion Mack.... Annabelle Lee
Charles Smith .... Mr. Lee
Richard Allen .... His Son
Glen Cavender .... Captain Anderson
Jim Farley .... General Thatcher
Frederick Vroom....Southern General
Joe Keaton....Union General
Mike Donlin....Union General
Tom Nawn .... Union General B
Buster Keaton .... Johnnie Gray

Selected for the National Film Registry, 1989

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK (25 December 1878, Rybinsk, Russia—22 October 1961, Beverly Hills, a stroke) was one of Hollywood’s legendary producers. He produced all of Keaton’s great films (through Steamboat Bill, Jr). Some others of his 90 films were As You Like It (1936), Under Two Flags (1936), Hallelujah, I'm a Bum (1933), Rain (1932), Indiscreet (1931), Camille (1927), The Duchess of Buffalo (1926), Go West (1925), The Frozen North (1922), My Wife's Relations (1922), The Paleface (1922), She Loves and Lies (1920), Convict 13 (1920), The Probation Wife (1919), Her Only Way (1918), Coney Island (1917), His Wedding Night (1917), and Panthea (1917). He won an honorary Academy Award in 1953.

CLYDE BRUCKMAN (20 September 1894, San Bernardino, California—4 January 1955, Hollywood, suicide) wrote the screenplays for about 60 lightweight films, the most recent of which was Goof on the Roof 1953. He directed 21 films, the last of them Man on the Flying Trapeze 1935. Some of the others were Horses' Collars 1935, The Fatal Glass of Beer 1933, Everything's Rosie 1931, Leave 'Em Laughing 1928, Should Tall Men Marry? 1927, Love 'Em and Feed 'Em 1927, Cowboys Cry for It 1925. “Clyde Bruckman was one of the best gag men in the business. When Keaton credited him for co-direction of one of his pictures, he was signed up by Harold Lloyd. In fact, he had no directorial experience at all, and the responsibility of his new job unnerved him. On top of this, marital troubles led him to drink. In 1955, Bruckman borrowed a gun from Keaton. After a meal in a Hollywood restaurant, which he was unable to pay for, he went to the rest room and shot himself.” Kevin Brownlow, The Parade's Gone By

The Great Locomotive Chase is a factual account by one of the participants in a cross-country train chase during the American Civil War. A band of Northern soldiers, led by a professional spy, James J. Andrews, masqueraded as Southern civilians and commandeered a Southern train, destroying telegraph wires key to the southern war effort as they headed north aboard the train. William A. Fuller, the conductor of the stolen train, pursued them—initially on foot, then in a handcar, and finally with a locomotive he discovered along the way. Assisted by men he recruited during the chase, Fuller reclaimed the train after the Northerners abandoned it. Keaton added two central features to this story: 1) a second train chase, in which the Northern soldiers chase Buster south after he recovers the stolen locomotive; and 2) a romantic plot that parallels the Northern soldiers’ chase. “The General was my pet. It was a page out of history, although I couldn’t use the original finish. Walt Disney tried to do it later {as The Great Locomotive Chase}, but he couldn’t use the real finish either. Because the Southerners took all eight of those guys and they hanged them.” Buster Keaton

Asked years later why his Civil War depiction looked so much more authentic than Gone With The Wind Keaton replied: “They went to a novel; I went to the history books.”

“I went to the original location, from Atlanta Georgia, up to Chattanooga, and the scenery didn’t look very good. In fact, it looked terrible. The railroad tracks I couldn’t use at all, because the Civil War trains were narrow-gauge. I had to have narrow-gauge, so I went to Oregon. And in Oregon, the whole state is honey-combed with narrow-gauge railways for all the lumber mills. So we got the rolling equipment, wheels and trucks, and we built the freight train and our passenger train, and we remodeled three locomotives. Luckily, the engines working on these lumber camps were all so doggone old that it was an easy job. . . . At that time they didn’t pay much attention to numbers on engines—they named them all. That’s why the main engine was called ‘The General’ and the one I chased it with was ‘Texas..’” Buster Keaton, quoted in Tom Dardis, Keaton: The Man Who Wouldn’t Lie Down

“Film actor and director Jackie Chan extends Keaton’s influence into the realm of Hong Kong action cinema: he acknowledges his debt to Keaton for many of his most dangerous stunts in almost every interview he gives. The roots of his affinity with Keaton originate in Chan’s early childhood training in Peking opera, the most popular and well-known Chinese theater form.... Although Chan employs fast cutting in his fight sequences, shooting them in small segments, he studiously avoids cutting when he performs his most dangerous, Keaton-inspired stunts, retaining Keaton’s practice of using long shots and long takes to prove that he actually performs his stunts. Moreover, Chan further emphasizes his physical virtuosity as a performer by frequently including up to three takes of the same stunt in rapid succession and including outtakes of his failed attempts at his stunts during the final credits.
of most of his films.” Robert Knopf, The Theater and Cinema of Buster Keaton, Princeton, 1999

“He could tell his story by lifting an eyebrow. He could tell it by not lifting an eyebrow.” Clyde Bruckman.

“What a raw deal they gave poor Buster,” said Louise Brooks. “When his wife divorced him, Joe Schenck made sure that he didn’t own his own films, so he could never resell them. They weren’t his own property. Like Lloyd’s or Chaplin’s. He didn’t have a cent. He lived in a magnificent house, on the same scale as a millionaire. But a millionaire’s income comes in every year for ever. Poor Buster lived in a mansion with eight or nine servants on three thousand dollars a week. Schenck was making money out of actors, out of films, out of stories. What did it matter to him or Sam Goldwyn if they lost two thousand to four thousand dollars a week in the big bridge games? Or went to the Clover Club and lost twenty thousand? They forced the actors, like Buster, to take part because the moment you haven’t any dough you’re through. You aren’t brave any more. No actor could compete financially with a producer. Poor little Buster with his three thousand dollars a week, trying to live like a millionaire. It was impossible. So they broke him.” Louise Brooks, in Kevin Brownlow’s The Parade’s Gone By

“I think Joe Schenck was the first old turtle Darwin saw when the Beagle anchored off the Galapagos—certainly not a cuddly ‘father figure’ for Keaton. Anyhow Buster, like Peter Pan, didn’t want a father. He had his magic world of film production and his house rigged like a Douglas Fairbanks set—or Peter Pan’s ship.” Louise Brooks

In 1928, Keaton made the worst mistake of his life: he signed a contract with MGM “despite the urgent warnings of Chaplin and Lloyd and his own misgivings.” The salary was good—$3000 a week—but MGM squelched the improvisatory methods he’d used on all his great films. They assigned 22 writers to The Cameraman. He had marital troubles, began drinking heavily, and suffered more and more under studio control. MGM fired him in 1933. The next decade was grim: booze, illness, failure. His first marriage broke up and he married a nurse who helped him dry out. His third marriage was in 1940, when he was 45. Eleanor was a 21-year-old dancer and they were happily married until his death. Gradually he got cameo roles, such as the bridge scene in Sunset Boulevard and his brief appearance in Chaplin’s Limelight, their only film together. James Agee’s 1949 article, “Comedy’s Greatest Era” did much to revive interest in Keaton.

“In retrospect, Buster Keaton was probably the best comedy director in the business. Chaplin’s use of film was pedestrian by comparison.” Kevin Brownlow, The Parade’s Gone By, 1968.

“Rather to his bewilderment, Keaton found himself elevated from near-oblivion to a position of equality with—or even superiority to—Chaplin in the pantheon of film comedians, a critical estimation that still holds good. ‘Keaton,’ stated Andres Sarris, ‘is now generally acknowledged as the superior director and inventor of visual forms. There are those who would go further and claim Keaton as pure cinema as opposed to Chaplin’s theatrical cinema.’ ...The climax of Keaton’s return to fame came at the 1965 Venice Film Festival, where Film, a 22-minute short written for him by Samuel Beckett, was premiered. Later that day, at the evening gala, Keaton was given a standing ovation of unparalleled fervor. He was touched and delighted, but told Lotte Eisner afterwards, ‘Sure it’s great—but it’s all 30 years too late.’ He continued working to within 3 months of his death, although there were now far more offers than he could fulfill.” World Film Directors I, 1987

“I was a veteran before I went into pictures. I was twenty-one years old by then. I made my first picture when I was 25. Pacing—for fast action you cut things closer than normal. For a dramatic scene, you lengthen them out a little bit more. Once we’ve seen the scene on the screen, we know what to do. We get in the cutting room and run down to where the action is. There—as he goes out the door, rip it. That’s it. Give him the next shot. Get it down to where he’s just coming through the door. Get the two spliced together. . . .

“There was one big advantage in those days, when you owned your own studio, and you were the only company in there. The skeleton of your outfit—that’s your technical man, your prop man, your head electrician—these people are all on salary with you for 52 weeks of the year. So if I’m sitting in the cutting room and the picture’s been finished, and I want an extra shot, I can do it....That would cost me the gasoline of the car and the film...about two dollars and thirty-nine cents. You try that at any major studio today, and I’ll tell you the least you could get that scene for would be around $12,000.”

Buster Keaton

“After what must have been one of history’s most agreeable childhoods, spent traveling with his family’s knockabout act and learning the tricks of the comic trade on turn-of-the-century vaudeville stages, Buster Keaton as a young man entered the movies. First serving several apprentice years, he performed from 1917 through 1919 as a supporting actor with Fatty Arbuckle’s Comique Film Corporation, and in 1920 as the leading actor in one Metro feature, The Saphead. Then, in the decade that followed, the last great golden-tinted years of the silent screen, he became both the star and principal creator of nineteen two-reelers and twelve feature-length films.

“Except for the last two features, produced under growing difficulties after Keaton had been contracted to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, these movies of the twenties are all independent Keaton creations. He and his crew in the Keaton Studio controlled every aspect of the films’ making and were under no constraints to please anyone but themselves. They ended up pleasing not only themselves but a large contemporary audience, and, since the rediscovery of Keaton in the nineteen-sixties, a new and growing audience, which still laughs in all the funny places.”

Daniel Moews, Keaton: The Silent Features Close Up

Few are those who know how to accomplish their mission in the rhythmic, architectural workings of a film. It is the editing—film’s golden key—that combines, comments on, and unifies all these elements. Can greater cinematic virtue be reached? Some have wanted to believe in the inferiority of Keaton as the “anti-virtuoso” in comparison with Chaplin, considering this a handicap, a sort of stigma, whereas we consider it a virtue that Keaton achieves comic effect through direct harmony with the tools, situations, and other means of production. Keaton is loaded with humanity—but a recent and wholly original humanity; a fashionable humanity if you will.

Much has been said about technique in films like Metropolis and Napoléon. No one ever talks about films like College [Keaton’s film after The General], and that is because the technical achievements are so indissolubly mixed with other elements that we aren’t even aware of them, just as we don’t give thought to the strength ratings of buildings for a house we are living in. The super-films serve as a lesson to technicians; Keaton’s films give lessons to reality itself, with or without the techniques of reality.

Luis Buñuel, An Unspeakable Betrayal. UCal 1995

Few people know more about Keaton than Ranjit Sandhu, who helped us produce the Buffalo Film Seminars in our first two years at the Market Arcade. The best starting place for information about Keaton online is Ranjit’s article on The General his website: http://trjbuffalo.com/the-general.html. This the bibliographical note Ranjit prepared for that article:

Perhaps the best place to start learning about Keaton’s life and work is the web site operated by the Damfinos — The International Buster Keaton Society. An impressive British-based web site is the Blinking Buzzards. Another superb source is the three-part video by Kevin Brownlow and David Gill called Buster Keaton: A Hard Act to Follow, which was available on laserdisc and VHS from HBO, but is now out of print. It is still available as a single cassette from Connoisseur/Academy Video in England in PAL-system VHS and on Region-2 PAL DVD from Network. An impressive article/interview is published as chapter 43 of Kevin Brownlow’s The Parade’s Gone By... (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1968). The best books about Buster Keaton’s life are Oliver Lindsey Scott’s superb, seductive, and encyclopedic Buster Keaton, the Little Iron Man ([New Zealand: privately printed (1995)]), Rudi Blesh’s Keaton (New York: Macmillan, 1966), and Buster Keaton’s autobiography (as told to Charles Samuels), My Wonderful World of Slapstick (Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday & Company, 1960). The best book on Keaton’s work is Jim Kline’s The Complete Films of Buster Keaton (New York: Citadel Press, 1993). David Macleod’s The Sound of Buster Keaton (London: Buster Books, 1995), which deals only with the post-independence work, is also highly recommended. Daniel Moews’s Keaton: The Silent Features Close Up contains an invaluable final section entitled “Bibliographical and Filmographical Comments.” More recently, Eleanor Keaton and Jeffrey Vance published Buster Keaton Remembered, a lovely coffee-table book with fascinating text and never-before-published photos. And then when you begin to wonder about all the contradictions in the various accounts, a great remedy is Patty Tobias’s wonderful essay, “The Buster Keaton Myths.” A charming and intensely researched booklet on the Actors’ Colony, which Buster’s father helped found just outside of Muskegon, Michigan, and where Buster had his happiest childhood memories, is Marc Okkonen and Ron Pesch’s Buster Keaton and the Muskegon Connection: The Actors’ Colony at Bluffton, 1908–1938 (Muskegon: privately printed, 1995; available through the Muskegon Mercantile). Marion Meade, whose atrocious and offensively inaccurate book, Buster Keaton: Cut to the Chase (working title: Quiet! The Tumultuous Life of Buster Keaton), infuriated Keaton’s family and friends, has nonetheless done the world a service by making her wealth of research material, much of it unique, available at the University of Iowa Libraries’ Special-Collections Department. Material on the making of The General can be found in some of the above items, but the best source is The Day Buster Smiled (Cottage Grove, Oregon: Cottage Grove Historical Society, 1998).

Marion Meade’s Buster Keaton: Cut to the Chase (NY Da Capo, 1997) does not have Ranjit’s approval, but does have two of Keaton’s favorite recipes:

LOBSTER JOSEPH

This is Keaton’s recipe for his all-time favorite dish, purloined over a period of years from a Parisian restaurant. Serve with bite-size boiled potatoes, green salad, and sourdough bread. Bread and potatoes are dunked in the sauce.

1 pint sour cream
1 square butter, ¼ pound
2 30-ounce cans solid pack tomatoes (unseasoned)
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
4 medium lobsters (cooked)
1 ounce brandy
2 ounces sweet sherry

Melt butter. Blend in sour cream, add tomatoes (putting aside tomato juice). Combine sherry and brandy in separate pan. Burn out most of the alcohol and add to sauce. Add tomato juice as needed to desired consistency. Cut lobster into bite size and heat in sauce.

Fish fillets can be substituted for the lobster. Melt butter and quickly saute 1 pound fillets (sole is good). Remove to warm dish. Do not overcook. Add well-drained tomatoes to remaining butter, mixing and chopping with spoon. Add salt and pepper. When tomato-butter mixture is hot (but not boiling) mix in sour cream, a bit at a time. Add brandy and sherry, or white port. Mix well.

PORKPIE HAT

Keaton’s trademark hats were homemade. The first was created in 1917 for The Butcher Boy.

1 Stetson hat, which has been cut down to size
3 heaping teaspoons granulated sugar
1 teacup warm water

Mix sugar and water. Wet the top and bottom of the brim. Smooth it out on a clean, hard surface. Allow to dry until still. “I did the early ones myself, always—and then I trained my wife,” Keaton said.

COMING UP IN THE SPRING 2007 BUFFALO FILM SEMINARS (REDUX) XIV:

Jan 23 Jean Cocteau, Beauty and the Beast/La Belle et la bête 1946
Jan 30 Leni Riefenstahl, Triumph of the Will/Triumph des Willens 1935
Feb 3 Georg Wilhem Pabst, Pandora’s Box/Die Büchse der Pandora 1929
(but Philip Carli on electronic piano)
Feb 20 Vittorio De Sica, Bicycle Thieves/Ladri di biciclette 1947
Feb 27 Yasujiro Ozu, Tokyo Story/Tokyo monogatari 1953
March 6 Orson Welles, Touch of Evil 1958
March 20 David Lean, Lawrence of Arabia 1962
March 27 Jean-Luc Godard, Contempt/Le Mépris 1963
April 3 Stanley Kubrick, Dr. Strangelove 1964
April 10 Sergio Leone, The Good the Bad and the Ugly/Il Buono, il brutto, il cattivo 1966
April 17 Robert Altman, Nashville 1975
April 24 Stanley Donen and Gene Kelly, Singin’ in the Rain 1952

For the most interesting new independent films, check out the Emerging Cinema series at the Market Arcade.

Contacts: ...email Diane Christian: engde@buffalo.edu ...email Bruce Jackson bjackson@buffalo.edu ...for the series schedule, annotations, links and updates: http://buffalofilmseminars.com ...for the weekly email informational notes, send an email to either of us. ...for cast and crew info on any film: http://imdb.com/search.html

The Buffalo Film Seminars are presented by the Market Arcade Film & Arts Center and State University of New York at Buffalo with support from the John R. Oishei Foundation